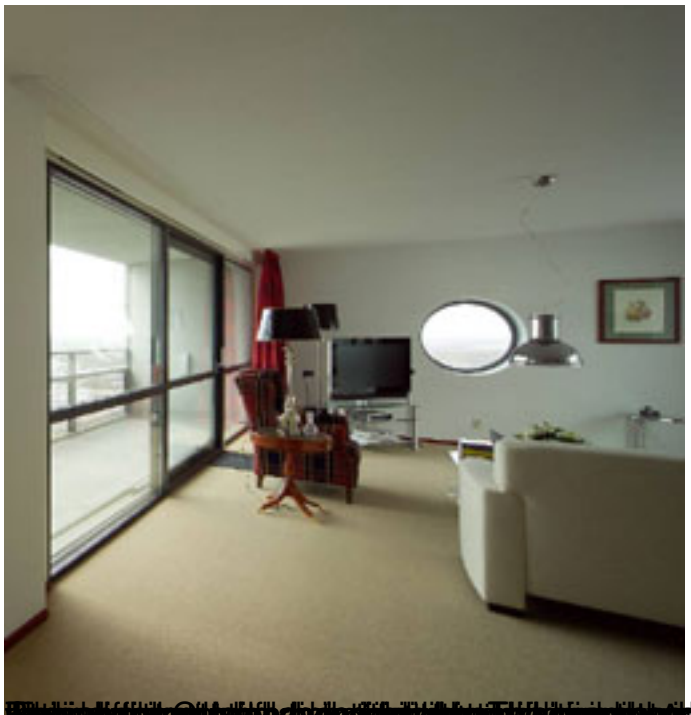
Via DeZona Design .
images: Allard van der Hoek

De Rokade is a residential building created by Arons en Gelauff. It's adjacent to the nursing and care home, Maartenshof, which has been extensively renovated.
The apartments for purchase are intended for the "younger seniors". In this way, Maartenshof can supply care to the buyers, without this care being visible to the outside world.


Towers in the Netherlands often have a minimum of four dwellings per layer for budgetary reasons. This is also true of De Rokade. The building is 21 floors high and seems very slim due to the cross-shaped ground plan. The four apartments are situated in L-form around the inside angles of the tower. In this way, the dwellings combine the beautiful view with an introverted quality.