

The project has a remarkable site. It is located in the magnificent region of Torres Del Paine (Paine Towers), in Patagonia, Chile, situated in the southernmost portion of South America. The architect, Germán del Sol delves in the many splendors of the site as well as the particularities of local culture and extract an architecture that is unique, well integrated to its environment, and that helps the visitor build his own impressions of the place.

The inspiration for the hotel, according to the architect, comes from the sheep farm's buildings of Patagonia, not particularly the main houses of the estancias with their warm interiors closed to their surroundings, but the buildings for the sheep where the farmers work and where the daily Patagonian life is lived
