

This was the first house completed in new Dallas neighborhood devoted entirely to Modernism. As our clients were the first they were able to select a premier albeit irregularly-shaped site that overlooks a public park and waterway.

Guests enter from the street under a covered porch that leads to a double-height entry that is illuminated from above. The space compresses just before entering the next double-height volume of the living room. This space is adjoined by the dining space and kitchen.

Final site plan showing building footprint and typical landscape elements including a pool, spa, and lawn. The plan also shows the location of the house and the motor court.

Photograph of the interior of the Vanguard Way office building in Dallas, Texas. The image shows a modern office space with large glass windows and a glass partition wall. The view outside shows a cityscape at dusk. The interior includes a bed, a desk, and a chair.
