

Designed as a new “window” for the city facing the lake: a work of architecture halfway between earth and sky, a design based on the typical natural features of the local landscape: the water of the lake, the wood of the trees, the stone of the Dolomites.

A simple architectural design proposal: a linear, harmonious building with an entirely glazed head and a tail that rises in height to enclose the fly tower of the theater. □

A sinuous body that creates urban spaces in the context, like the square that welcomes visitors arriving from the historical center of the city. The large internal hall of the building opens toward the lake with a large window.

The interior spaces are arranged around two main rooms: the theater, with 600 seats, and the convention hall, which can contain up to 1200 persons. Two distinct volumes clad in wood to set them apart from the other functional elements, and recognizable from the square through the glass skin.

From inside the volume, perception of the external environment is modified thanks to the differentiated treatment of the facades: large glass surfaces around the square and towards the lake form a contrast with solid surfaces clad in stone. The design thus generates luminous circulation spaces along with a volume that is organically inserted, in spite of its different typology and autonomous form, inside the existing volume.□

The image is a rendering of a building at night. The building is a tall, rectangular structure with a dark facade. A large, illuminated screen is embedded in the side of the building, displaying a scene with a woman in a blue dress and a man. The building is set against a dark sky with a mountain in the background. The foreground shows a paved area with some trees and a few people walking. The overall scene is illuminated by the building's lights and the screen's glow.

Recognizable in the city. All delicate details are treated with the same modularity, creating a sense of rhythm and flow.
