

This 3300 SF Seattle residence is built on an irregularly shaped, sloping site with an outstanding scenic view, overlooking Lake Washington with diagonal views of Mt. Baker to the northeast and Mt. Rainier to the southeast.

In addition to the typical program for a three bedroom house, the owner requested a semi-detached guest suite and studio as well as a tall, covered 'veranda' that would allow for protected outdoor living without blocking natural light from entering the house.

This is a photograph of the staircase in the Leschi Residence in Seattle, WA. The staircase is made of wood and metal, and is located in a modern house. The photograph is taken from a low angle, looking up at the stairs. The stairs are made of light-colored wood and have a dark metal railing. The railing is made of vertical bars. The stairs are set against a wall with large windows. The wall is made of light-colored wood and has a slatted pattern. The windows are made of wood and have a view of the outdoors. The photograph is taken in a bright, well-lit area.

View from the right of the space looking out to the balcony and park. The way of the upper is a sliding glass door.
