

Do industrial buildings have to be dull? Not necessarily, if we rely on this project by Danish architects, KHR Arkitekter. The combined production and administration building for fiberglass manufacturer Fiberline, stands as a piece of identity-generating 'countryside-art' by the motorway close to Middelfart. Like a hill the building grows out of the landscape and arches its back against the sky.

The building's high bay end is typical for the production of the factory. The building's height is

Project Director: Poul Mies van der Rohe Award 2007, awarded the Danish plast price and the